To the Seniors

By Cynthia Talley

We won't say we're going to miss you;
 That's quite old—we want this new—
 But shall we say we'll remember? Yes, that's the least we can do.

We'll remember Warren's speeches, Stuart's news and Bousman, too. Mildred Patterson and Nelson; You all, not just these few.

We might write for days—well, hours—
 Marking all the things you did. But it seems the best or finest Deed is often lost or hid.

What makes this place we call a city,
 Who turns a building into home? Ah, sure 'tis those who live within
 And not the size of wall or dome.

Who makes a wood a fairy play land?
 Woods, resorts from brace and crutch. It is the unseen ones who bide there,
 Not the fact we call it such.

Woods and bricks complete this structure
 That we deign to call a school. What then makes it worth our interest?
 Surely not the Golden Rule.

No, you'll find it's not the outside. Only what it holds within:
 Voices, laughs of merry students; You, dear Seniors, you have been—
 That which makes this school a city,
 That which makes these rooms a home;
 You are really our G. W. Thoughts of you will ever roam
 About our campus.
 And yes, we shall remember.
